LIT 99/English Department Orientation Seminar
(fall)
0 course unit

LIT 200/Genre Studies: Poetry
(every semester)
1 course unit

Prerequisite: Reserved for English students
This course is designed to provide students with an overview and basic comprehension of the diverse forms and devices of poetry; in particular, students will develop a fundamental understanding of poetry's rhetorical structures and conventions.

LIT 201/Approaches to Literature
(every semester)
1 course unit

Prerequisite: Reserved for English students
An introduction to the various approaches and theories employed by professional literary critics and scholars to enhance students' understanding, evaluation, and appreciation of literary works.

LIT 210/Speculative Fiction
(annually)
1 course unit

An exploration of theoretical issues surrounding science fiction and fantasy literature, as well as unconventional literature that resists this categorization. Students will read, discuss, and write about novels, short stories, and theoretical texts; poetry, film, and other media may also be assigned. Each section may focus on specific writers and/or theme(s).

LIT 211/ British and American Women Writers
(same as WGS 211)
1 course unit

(occasionally)
Exploration of literary and gender studies focused specifically on Anglo-American women writers from the 17th century to the present.

LIT 212/ Cultural Representation of Gender
(occasionally)
1 course unit

LIT 217/Issues in Multicultural Literature
(every semester)
1 course unit

Prerequisite: Reserved for English students
An exploration of how literary texts within the evolving field of multicultural studies challenge simple notions of universality and canonicity through approaches to key issues in multicultural literature. Special attention to debates over aesthetic value, literary historiography, and disciplinary politics. Rotating course content.

LIT 222/Genre Studies: Short Story
(every semester)
1 course unit

This course is designed to provide students with an overview and basic comprehension of the diverse forms and functions of the genre of the short story; in particular, students will develop a fundamental understanding of the history, structure, and conventions of the short story by analyzing literary works that adhere to and/or challenge this generic tradition.

LIT 223/Genre Studies: The Novel
(spring)
1 course unit

This course is designed to provide students with an overview and basic comprehension of the diverse forms and functions of the genre of the novel; in particular, students will develop a fundamental understanding of the history, structure, and conventions of the novel by analyzing literary works that adhere to and/or challenge this generic tradition.

LIT 224/Autobiography
(occasionally)
1 course unit

Consideration of a wide variety of purposes and techniques that shape life stories. Focal themes include conversion narratives, coming-of-age narratives, illness or life-crisis narratives, representative voices, and life summaries. Autobiographers include Augustine, Rousseau, Montaigne, Frederick Douglass, Black Elk, Richard Rodriguez, Paul Monette, Annie Dillard, and Maya Angelou. Various theories of autobiography will also be discussed.

LIT 226/Genre Studies: The Film
1 course unit
(spring)
Provides students with an overview and basic comprehension of the diverse forms and functions of film as an art form; in particular, students will develop a fundamental understanding of the history, structure and conventions of film, by analyzing films that adhere to and/or challenge this generic tradition.

LIT 227/Global Animated Film
1 course unit
(same as CMP 227)
(every semester)
This course introduces students to the fundamental aspects of animation as an art form in a global context. Students will develop a fundamental understanding of the history, structure, and conventions of animated film by analyzing a range of works within this broad tradition.

LIT 230/The Classical Tradition
1 course unit
(same as CMP 230)
(every semester)
Introduces students to a literary tradition that originates in the classical period. The course will put readings into literary and historical context by focusing on a pivotal literary moment or text. The course will explore literary and historical relations - the textual "ancestors" and "progeny" that make up the particular classical tradition under consideration, as well as the surrounding philological, social, and political contexts of the selected pivotal moment in that tradition. The course will also draw upon at least two distinct cultures, at least one of which must be classical.

LIT 231/World Literature to 1700
1 course unit
(same as CMP 231)
(every semester)
Introduces students to selected literary traditions before 1700. The course will put readings into literary and historical context by focusing on a pivotal literary moment or text. The course will explore literary and historical relations - the textual "ancestors" and "progeny" that influenced or rewrote the pivotal text of the course, as well as the surrounding philological, social, and political contexts of the selected literary moment. The course will also draw upon at least two distinct cultures or traditions, at least one of which must be non-English-speaking.

LIT 232/World Literature Since 1700
1 course unit
(same as CMP 232)
(every semester)
Introduces students to selected literary traditions since 1700. The course will put readings into literary and historical context by focusing on a pivotal literary moment or text. The course will explore literary and historical relations—the textual “ancestors” and “progeny” that influenced or rewrote the pivotal text of the course, as well as the surrounding philological, social, and political contexts of the selected literary moment. The course will also draw upon at least two distinct cultures or traditions, at least one of which must be non-English-speaking.

LIT 233/World Drama
1 course unit
(spring)
(same as TTR 233)
Immerses students in the study of plays from the classical to contemporary periods as literary texts. Readings, lecture, discussion, and papers also examine aspects of theatrical production, thus providing a broad background in the theory, history, structure, terminology, conventions, and subgenres of drama and theatre. Emphasis is on Western drama but examples of non-Western comedy and tragedy are included.
LIT 251/British Literature to 1700 1 course unit
(every semester)
In this course, students take a close look at specific literary techniques and genres, and at aspects of British culture, in selected examples of pre-1660 British literature. The course is designed to engage students in the analysis and interpretation of texts in their diverse historical, aesthetic, cultural, and theoretical contexts; and to lead to an understanding and appreciation of the development of literary traditions, cultural values, modes of thought, and uses of language.

LIT 252/British Literature since 1700 1 course unit
(every semester)
Introduces students to British and Anglophone literary traditions since 1700. The instructor may choose to focus the course on a pivotal literary moment, text, or theme. At least half the course will be devoted to literature before Modernism. The course will also draw upon at least two distinct cultures or traditions, at least one of which will be outside the British Isles.

LIT 272/Literature of the United States 1 course unit
(every semester)
This course is designed to provide students with the opportunity to acquire a broad-based, foundational knowledge and understanding of American literature since 1800. Emphasis will be placed on formulating a coherent understanding of the texts, contexts, concerns, and problematics which have influenced the American literary tradition since the early nineteenth century.

LIT 280/Literature, Film, and the Art of American Politics 1 course unit
(fall)
An exploration of the relationships between writers, filmmakers, and American political culture. The course examines the many ways in which creative artists have historically engaged such issues as individualism, rights, public opinion, citizenship, and the responsibilities of democracy.

LIT 281/Early African American Literature: The Colonial Period to the Harlem Renaissance 1 course unit
(same as AAS 221)
(fall)
A study of selected African American Literature from the colonial period to the Harlem Renaissance, this course will build students’ knowledge and confidence as readers and critics of African American culture and society in the United States. The course will also explore the canon of African American Literature, its literary tradition, and the intersections with and diversions from the canon of American Letters.

LIT 282/20th Century African-American Literature: Realism to Contemporary Literature 1 course unit
(same as AAS 222)
(spring)
A study of literature in the African American tradition, focusing on the realist, naturalist and modernist writings of the 1940s and 1960s, the prose, poetry, essays and speeches of the Black Arts Movement and contemporary African American literature. The course will also explore the canon of African American Literature, its literary tradition, and the intersections with and diversions from the canon of American Letters.

LIT 310/Literature for Younger Readers 1 course unit
(every semester)
Prerequisite: Reserved for junior and senior English students
This course focuses on canonical and contemporary works of literature written for children and young adults within the context of literary theory.
LIT 311/Women's Autobiographies, Diaries, and Letters 1 course unit
(same as WGS 314)
(spring)
A study of the range of women's autobiographical texts and their manuscript circulation, publication, and readership. Applying many theoretical perspectives to this ever-expanding corpus of women's literature and life-writing across the ages.

LIT 313/Gay and Lesbian Literature 1 course unit
(same as WGS 341)
(every semester)
Gay and Lesbian Literature primarily reflects on "literary" texts (novels, poems, and plays), considering the aesthetics, politics, and history of gay and lesbian literary production and consumption. With recent advances in cultural studies and queer studies, this course will also embrace works that are sometimes situated outside of traditional definitions of "literary" (children's books, movies, and pulp fiction), with an examination of the course theme from a variety of literary methodologies, such as reader response criticism and discourse analysis.

LIT 314/Gender and 20th Century American Literature 1 course unit
(occasionally)

LIT 315/Men and Masculinities: Literary Perspectives 1 course unit
(same as WGS 320)
(every semester)
This course focuses on representations of men and masculinity in literary texts, although we may also look at film, video, television, advertising, and music. Some of the issues we will be thinking about include: the construction of modern male identities, the diversity of men's lives, the complex dynamics of men's relationships, and questions of power and social justice within the contemporary gender order.

LIT 316/Global Women Writers 1 course unit
(same as WGS 376)
(every semester)
This course will explore various literatures from around the world, encouraging students to examine the politics of gender, culture, and nation as well as the intersections of those systems of power. In exploring everything from arranged marriages to women in war, Global Women Writers will provide students - especially those students who have spent much of their lives within the borders of the U.S. - with one of the most challenging and rewarding courses of their college career. Common themes include feminist politics, post- and neo-colonialisms, reproductive rights, translation, globalization, and activism.

LIT 317/The Witch in Literature 1 course unit
(same as WGS 317)
(fall)
Exploration of the socio-historical constructions of the witch through a wide spectrum of literary texts: from medieval religious expositions to Puritan legal treatises, from German fairy tales to modern day films, from children's literature to critical theory, from 17th-century courtroom narratives to 21st century propaganda.

LIT 321 Shakespeare: Sources and Contexts 1 course unit
(every semester)
The course reconstructs the literary "horizon of expectations" for Shakespeare's comedies, histories, and tragedies at the time of their first performance. This will not be a course in Shakespeare per se but rather a course in the literary, dramatic, and cultural texts that shaped the literary expectations, perceptions, and tastes of Shakespeare and his audience.
LIT 334/Literature by Latinas and Latin American Women 1 course unit
(same as WGS 360) (fall)
A comparative study of Latina and Latin-American women's literature in English. Open to a wide range of literary traditions, nations, time periods, and genres, including those specific to non-Western and post-Colonial cultures. The focus varies by semester.

LIT 335/Caribbean Women Writers 1 course unit
(same as AAS 335) (spring)
Anglophone and English translations of Hispanophone and Lusophone writings by Caribbean women writers of African descent will be examined. Post Colonial and Africana feminist literary criticism will be used to explore the intersectionalities of race, gender, class, and sexuality on this literature as well as its connection to the writings African and other Diaspora women.

LIT 340/The Bible as Literature 1 course unit
(every semester)
An examination of the major elements and conventions of the literature of the ancient Hebrews and early Christians as exemplified in the Bible. Emphasis will be placed on influential motifs and images, narrative technique, poetic style, genre, and cultural and historical context.

LIT 342/Mythology 1 course unit
(same as CMP 342) (fall)
This course is designed to provide students with the opportunity to study significant myths and legends which have influenced the shape and content of both Eastern and Western literature and to acquaint them with the shifting and conflicting ways in which mythology has been transmitted and studied from the ancient world to the contemporary, from the East to the West.

LIT 343/Late Medieval Writers 1 course unit
(same as CMP 343) (fall)
An examination of the flowering of vernacular literature that occurred in western Europe in the fourteenth century. Emphasis will be placed on reconstructing how and why fourteenth-century writers, such as Dante, Juan Ruiz, Boccaccio, Froissart, Petrarch, Chaucer, and Christine de Pizan, came to create a vernacular tradition that transcended national and linguistic boundaries. Topics in the course may include fourteenth-century literary theory, marginalized and competing voices in the century, classical and vernacular precursors, material production of books in the period, social and political change in late medieval Europe, international relations of the period, and theories of literary influence.

LIT 346/Romanticism 1 course unit
(same as CMP 346) (fall)
This course will explore the phenomenon of Romanticism in Great Britain, the United States and Europe from a comparative perspective. Emphasis will be placed on analyzing how Romanticism intersects with other literary trends of the period and on how it develops as a reaction to the classical ideals of the European Enlightenment and the eighteenth century.

LIT 347/Modern European Drama 1 course unit
(same as TTR 347) (fall)
Critical examination of select plays written in Europe, Britain, and Ireland from the 1870s to the present within contexts of modern European movements in philosophy, the arts, and politics. This period witnesses great experimentation in dramatic form and the advancement of theatre technology; the liberalization of subject matter inspired the writing and staging of a rich and varied body of drama.
LIT 348/Modern Poetry
(occasionally)
A close examination of how poets in the United States and England responded to the challenges of modernity.

LIT 352/British Drama
(occasionally)
Major British dramatists excluding Shakespeare.

LIT 354/Middle English Literature
(spring)
An examination of the difficulties inherent in reconstructing a literary tradition out of extant writing in English from the 12th to the 15th centuries. The course will focus on one or more literary genres (e.g., romance, dream vision, De casibus tragedy) and will focus on gaps in the historical development and definition of the chosen genre(s), as well as on attempts to fill those gaps to create a tenuous "native English" tradition.

LIT 357/Early Modern British Literature
(every semester)
An exploration of a variety of texts from 16th century England, a period that has been traditionally referred to as "the Renaissance" and more recently, the "Early Modern period." We will consider the implications of both of these terms in our examination of a wide array of texts from this exciting, tumultuous, chaotic, and productive age.

LIT 358/British Literature Reformed: 1550-1700
(every semester)
An exploration of literary strategies used by British writers of the late 16th and the 17th centuries as they question what it means to be a person of faith when the very nature of faith is undergoing challenges. What does a bright, ambitious Catholic gentleman do when university degrees are available only to Protestants? Do Puritans sin if they write fiction, since a "fiction" is a lie? Who should be allowed to interpret Scripture? How do people of faith maintain their integrity when they disagree with those in power? As they cope with these and other questions, British writers create compelling and innovative literature.

LIT 359/The 18th Century British Novel
(every semester)
An exploration on the ways in which the newly emerging genre of the novel registers the various forms of reaction, revolution and social "leveling" that occurred in the course of the eighteenth century in Great Britain. By examining the many aesthetic permutations and ground-breaking transformations which characterize the genre during this period, the course will provide students with a broad-based understanding of and exposure to the texts, ideologies and aesthetics which structured and influenced the development of the British novel of the eighteenth century.

LIT 360/British Literature, 1700–1820: Augustanism and Its Rivals
(every semester)
Explores tensions between rival groups of eighteenth-century British writers-most notably the Augustan satirists and their Whiggish adversaries-as they address important cultural, political, philosophical, and religious issues of the times. Special attention is given to defining the distinguishing characteristics of "Augustanism" and how this aesthetic became the norm against which all other literatures of the British eighteenth century have been defined.

LIT 361/British Romanticism
(occasionally)
Close examination of some of the major works of the poets and essayists of the Romantic Period. (1789-1832).
LIT 362/Victorian Era
(occasionally)
Course examines intersections between literature and culture during the British Victorian era (1837-1901). Since both the era and its literary output are far too vast to be treated comprehensively, the course will be organized around several literary/cultural topics. Students will become familiar with key social, political, and technological changes during the Victorian era and their impact on literature.

LIT 363/The 19th Century British Novel
(fall)
This course is designed to provide students with a broad-based understanding of and exposure to the texts, ideologies and aesthetics which structured and influenced the development of the British novel of the nineteenth century, including, but not limited to, the Romantic, Gothic, and Victorian periods. Instructors may choose to focus on a specific form or subgenre or on a theme relevant to a broad-based study of the nineteenth-century novel in Great Britain.

LIT 366/The 20th Century British Novel
(occasionally)
This course is designed to provide students with a broad-based understanding of and exposure to the British novel of the twentieth century including, but not limited to, the pre-war, post-war, and contemporary periods. Instructors may choose to focus on a particular period, subgenre or formal issue, or on a theme relevant to a broad-based study of the twentieth-century novel in Great Britain.

LIT 370/Studies in Literature
(every semester)
Focuses on a different topic for each version of the course. Recently offered sections of LIT 370 have included: Literature of the South, Popular American Novels, and Women's Autobiography. Course may be repeated up to three times with different topics.

LIT 371/Topics in African-American Literature
(same as AAS 371)
(occasionally)
This course promotes intensive study in the field of African-American literature through focused inquiry into particular themes, genres, time periods, or movements in the field. As a topics course, its content will vary from semester to semester and from instructor to instructor.

LIT 373/American Drama
(fall)
Critical examination of selected American plays representing the most important experiments in American dramaturgy, as well as those treating the prevailing American social issues of the 20th century. The course will examine attempts by American dramatists to raise American drama to the literary level of European playwrights who were infusing drama and theatre with the modern sensibility informed by changes in philosophy, science, and the fine arts; and/or to return drama and theatre to the literary level of classical Greek tragedy and Shakespeare. Toward the end of the course emphasis is given to the opening up of the American theatre to marginalized groups previously excluded from the stage.

LIT 374/American Literature to 1800
(fall)
This course is designed to provide students with the opportunity to acquire a broad-based, foundational knowledge and understanding of early American literature. Emphasis will be placed on formulating a coherent understanding of the texts, contexts, concerns, and problematics which influenced American literature before 1865 and which continue to structure interpretations of the period.

LIT 375/U.S. Literature, 1800–1860
(every semester)
An examination of American literary culture during the Jacksonian and antebellum periods and the problems involved in writing literary history and in forming (and expanding) a national canon. The course considers the cultural and historical pasts that inform these works, as well as the shifting notions of American identity that emerge in the texts.

LIT 376/U.S. Literature, 1860–1920
1 course unit
(spring)
The course emphasizes the fluidity of this literary period, examining the rise of realism and naturalism, as well as the emergence of the scientific and intellectual developments that would ultimately result in modernism.

LIT 377/ Modern American Literature
1 course unit
(fall)
This course explores the real or perceived ruptures with Realism, Naturalism, Romanticism, with literary production between the first and second World Wars, and with a host of literary moments and movements, such as Imagism, the Harlem Renaissance, expatriation, Southern Agrarianism, the jazz age, and the avant-garde.

LIT 385/ Literary Theory
1 course unit
(occasionally)

LIT 388/Contemporary Literature
1 course unit
(every semester)
Surveys post-1960 poetry and fiction. Emphasis is placed on introducing students to the aesthetic range of contemporary literature. Students will read and discuss authors and poets who represent major developments in traditional and non-traditional aesthetics.

LIT 391/Independent Study
variable course units
(every semester)
Intensive study of a literary or linguistic problem chosen through consultation between student and mentor.

LIT 394/Topics in Comparative Literature
1 course unit
(same as CMP 370)
(every semester)
Themes and content will vary from semester to semester and from instructor to instructor. However, all offerings of this course will seek to cultivate students' skills in comparative literary and cultural analysis and to foster a level of intellectual engagement with texts, contexts and traditions that recognizes the benefits to be derived from pursuing advanced study of literary works in their original languages.

LIT 395/Topics in Women Writers
1 course unit
(occasionally)

LIT 396/Studies in Film
1 course unit
(occasionally)
History, aesthetics, and theory of the film medium. Each semester, a different aspect of film will be explored; e.g., the Russian and German silent film, contemporary cinema.

LIT 421/Shakespeare: Comedies and Histories
1 course unit
(spring)
An in-depth study of selected comedies and histories within their generic classifications and within their historical, cultural, and critical contexts.

LIT 422/Shakespeare: Tragedies and Romances
1 course unit
(fall)
An in-depth study of selected tragedies and romances within their generic classifications and within their historical, cultural, and critical contexts.
LIT 427/Major Writers Before 1900 1 course unit
(spring)
This course is designed to provide students with an opportunity to focus their critical attention more narrowly on the life and work of a selected literary figure, as chosen by the instructor. Emphasis will be placed on recognizing the influence of the surrounding social, political, historical, aesthetic and cultural contexts on the literary development of the selected writer and on obtaining a comprehensive understanding of the range and depth of the chosen author's work and a familiarity with the relevant critical, biographical and textual scholarship.

LIT 428/Major Writers After 1900 1 course unit
(every semester)
This course is designed to provide students with an opportunity to focus their critical attention more narrowly on the life and work of a selected literary figure, as chosen by the instructor. Emphasis will be placed on recognizing the influence of the surrounding social, political, historical, aesthetic and cultural contexts on the literary development of the selected writer and on obtaining a comprehensive understanding of the range and depth of the chosen author's work and a familiarity with the relevant critical, biographical and textual scholarship.

LIT 470/Studies in Literature 1 course unit
(occasionally)
Focuses on a different topic for each version of the course; Problems of Genre in the Modernist Long Poem; Representations of Nature in Early Modern and Augustan Literature; Depictions of Childhood, 1800 to the Present, etc. Course may be repeated when topic changes.

LIT 476/Honors Project in English 1 course unit
(every semester)
Prerequisite: By application only
Special projects for those in the Honors Program and for other highly qualified students. For more information see the department chair.

LIT 477/Honors Project in English 2 course units
(every semester)
Prerequisite: By application only
Special projects for those in the Honors Program and for other highly qualified students. For more information see the department chair.

LIT 499/Seminar in Research and Theory 1 course unit
(every semester)
Prerequisite: LIT 201 and junior status
Small classes that focus on specific topics in literary or linguistic research and theory. Formal seminar presentations and several papers, including completion of a major research essay. To be taken twice by English majors - once in the junior, and once in the senior year.