Commissioners are able to build, maintain, and construct continuous railroad and telegraph to use the public land for the railroad, you need the rights from the public people. It would also need permission from any business 200 feet from each side of the railroad.

The Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas was authorized to construct the railroad & telegraph lines. Their restrictions consist from the Pacific coast to the eastern boundaries of California. Also they followed the terms given. After the construction of the first part of the railroad, they were instructed to continue through Territory of the U.S. to the Missouri

River following the same terms & conditions provided by the Union Pacific Railroad company. Roads shall meet and connect.

In this story, a little girl talks about how she got a rip in her new cotton dress but she wanted to fix it herself. She wanted to fix it herself because she knew what the kids had gone through to make it. She knew that little boys and girls worked 11 hours a day working at the cotton mill to make money for their families. She felt bad for them because they didn't get to live like a normal kid, like her.

The girl has a fear in her dress. She talks about the other kids working in the fields. She thought all the other children had fun. The children have to pick cotton for her dresses while their backs hurt. She sees the windmill and how it works. Bobbing whil around on large dams. Children work from 7am to 6pm.
